

"We can't ignore the genocide in Darfur....
We have to do everything in our power to make it stop. We have to act. Now."

"There must be real pressure placed on the Sudanese government. We know from past experience that it will take a great deal to get them to do the right thing."

"I know that if we care, the world will care.
If we bear witness, the world will know.
If we act, the world will follow."

"We can't say never again and then allow it to happen again.
As president of the United States, I don't plan to abandon people or turn a blind eye toward slaughter."

"THE UNITED STATES HAS A STAKE...
IN STABILIZING THIS REGION."

"We cannot, in good conscience, stand by and let this genocide continue."

"Sudan is a priority for this administration, particularly at a time when it cries out for peace and for justice. The worsening humanitarian crisis there makes our task
all the more urgent."

"We have a potential crisis of even greater dimensions than what we already saw."

"I actually think that America can speak effectively with one voice and bring the moral and other elements of our stature to bear in trying to deal with this situation."

"The international community has failed to do enough."

"Today we know what is right, and today we know what is wrong.
The slaughter of innocents is wrong. Two million people driven from their homes is wrong. Women gang-raped while gathering firewood is wrong.
And silence, acquiescence, and paralysis in the face of genocide is wrong."

"The United States, along with the U.N., must take immediate steps to halt this dire situation."

PRESIDENT OBAMA, All that conviction demands strong action.

The U.S. must (1) lead an effective and urgent peace process for Darfur; (2) build an international coalition for strict implementation of the North-South peace deal; and (3) implement a policy that creates real consequences for those who continue to attack civilians, block lifesaving aid, undermine peace, and obstruct justice. The situation in Sudan is urgent: 2.7 million Darfuris living in camps face the threat of rape and aid cut-offs, the country's president remains wanted for war crimes, and a return to a North-South civil war looms. Now is the time to live up to your words. All of them.
